Scott,

Thank you for your quick response.

As Thor may have told you I developed and then proved on a larger than pilot scale (now commercial) two of the major processes for renewable energy and locally grown food (all year round in Spokane). I built the first one in 1980.

Clive W. was only one of a handful of scientist/engineers who I have talked with that understood the essential “interactions”. He and I both were in aerospace (Douglas Aircraft Santa Monica) at its peak. At that time we did and had to have many/most disciplines talking to and understanding each other. The Delphi Method was developed by Douglas Aircraft for this purpose. It later became the Rand Corporation. What the Rand Corp. was then and now is as different as night and day. Clive and I discussed and believed something that could be called a “community mind” occurred during these early days in aerospace for those that “got the entire picture”.

I have attached a summary of the draft I thought needed to be written in order that some might accept the proposed (proven) solutions relative to sustainability, which must include only renewable energy. Your thoughts would be appreciated.

Leon
